The Lindbergh Kidnapping – a Guide

On March 1, 1932, Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., the 20-month old son of Charles Augustus and Anne Morrow Lindbergh was kidnapped from their home near Hopewell, New Jersey. Due to the incredible popularity of Lindbergh, the world-renowned American flyer, the subsequent trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, an illegal German immigrant attracted unprecedented public interest. At the time of the child's disappearance, kidnapping itself was not a federal crime. Quickly escalating into the most celebrated crime of the decade, the abduction galvanized a major public protest. This public outcry induced the federal government to enact the Federal Kidnap Statute – nicknamed the Lindbergh Law – that deems kidnapping a federal offense when a kidnapped victim is transported across state lines or if ransom demands are made through the mail.

Initially, the Federal Bureau of Investigation was shackled in the investigation. Given the new law, however, the FBI could intervene if the person kidnapped had not been returned after a week, as it could then be assumed that the victim had out been taken out of state. The penalty was life imprisonment. An amendment was passed a year later that stated that if the victim were harmed, the jury could recommend capital punishment. This amendment also allowed the FBI to start investigating within twenty-four hours of the crime. During the Lindbergh case, however, the New Jersey State Police performed the main Investigation with FBI assistance.

On May 12, 1932, the badly decomposed body of the missing boy was found in a shallow grave near the Lindbergh home near Hopewell, Mercer County, New Jersey. The dramatic six-week trial that ensued created a circus-like atmosphere in tiny Flemington, NJ and caused a major media frenzy of international proportions. In March 1935, having been convicted of first-degree murder, Hauptmann's first appeal was rejected. New Jersey Governor Harold

Hoffman, had reservations about Hauptmann's guilt and granted a thirty-day reprieve. However, the subsequent appeal was rejected and on April 3, 1936 Bruno Hauptmann was electrocuted at the New Jersey State Prison in Trenton, NJ. Harold Hoffman had committed political suicide

It is almost 65 years later and the world has changed dramatically. Lindbergh's phenomenal feat - the first nonstop air flight between New York and Paris, a 33-½ hour trip - has been completely overshadowed by the speed of the Concorde. Flemington is no longer a tiny country burg, sinking back into obscurity after the great notoriety and attention generated by these events. News is no longer dependent on reporters and radio announcers huddled in court rooms, running to telegram offices with each new bulletin; news flashes speed across the world almost instantaneously with their occurrence.

So just what explains the ongoing interest in the Lindbergh case and the "Trial of the Century"? Books, articles, and treatises are still published. An annual "Trial of the Century" Re-enactment is performed at the original Hunterdon County Courthouse for 3 weekends every October; it is a overwhelmingly popular event. There is a display relating to the trial in the front hall of the courthouse. Given the enduring fascination with the Lindbergh Kidnapping, a comprehensive resource tool has invaluable significance. This paper will attempt to do so with most of the concentration on government and official sources.

GENERAL RESOURCES

To fully explore all the essential qualities and circumstances of this landmark series of events, it is of great value to begin with an overview of the subject.

BACKGROUND

- County history. (2000). <http://www.co.hunterdon.nj.us/history.htm> (2 Dec. 2000).

A succinct and charming history of Hunterdon County provides an insightful glance into the atmosphere and situation inherent to the Lindbergh kidnapping and Hauptmann trial. This is an excellent starting point for the research.

- Encyclopaedia Britannica (online)

Hauptmann, Bruno (Richard). <http://www.britannica.com> (11 Nov. 2000).

A brief encapsulation of Hauptmann's life

Lindbergh, Charles A(ugustus). <http://www.britannica.com> (11 Nov. 2000).

A brief encapsulation of Lindbergh's life.

- Google.com

Charles Lindbergh. <http://www.google.com> (13 Nov. 2000).

Utilization of this search engine discloses sources for investigation. Searches using "Charles Lindbergh" yielded the following sites:

1. Ives, S. (Producer). (1990). Lindbergh: the American experience [Videorecording].

Alexandria, BA: PBS Video. <http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/amex/lindbergh/> (13 Nov. 2000).

(Available from PBS: <http://www.shop.pbs.org/cust/cdeploy>)

The videorecording includes archival footage, photos, and interviews, and presents a candid biography of a complex and controversial American icon. Also included on the website are a synopsis and complete transcript of the recording; extended interviews with program participants, including historian Max Lerner on the kidnapping; brief summation of Lindbergh's life in general and of the kidnapping in particular.

2. Linder, D. (1999). Famous American trials: Bruno Hauptmann (Lindbergh Kidnapping) trial. <http://www.law.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/Hauptmann/Hauptmann.htm/> (19 Nov. 2000).

This website, sponsored by The School of Law at the University of Missouri – Kansas City, is maintained by Doug Linder, Professor of Law as part of coursework in his “Seminar in Famous Trials” course. The Lindbergh kidnapping, a key component of this legal course, is well represented. Prof. Linder provides an excellent summation of the trial. Also provided are photographs of trial events and key people, places and things; key prosecution evidence; ransom notes and responses; the New York Times cover story of the kidnapping and the verdict; and the 10/9/35 court decision pertaining to Hauptmann's unsuccessful appeal.

3. UNITED STATES of America v. Brady Lavick ADAMS, United States Court of Appeals, Eleventh Circuit. No. 95-2550. (May 29, 1996).
<http://laws.findlaw.com/11th/952550opa.html> (18 Nov. 2000).

Searching the Find Law under Laws: Cases and Codes furnishes the first reference found to “Lindbergh Act” or “Lindbergh Law”. The site is a copy of the May 29, 1996 U. S. Court of Appeals, 11th Circuit, between the USA v. Brady Lavick. Noted in the brief is the following:

All in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 1201. The original version of § 1201, enacted into law in 1932 and known as the "Lindbergh Act," punished only those who kidnapped another person "for ransom or reward." See 18 U.S.C. § 408a (1932), quoted in Gooch v. United States, 297 U.S. 124, 125-126, 56 S.Ct. 395, 395-396, 80

L.Ed. 522 (1936). Section 408a was amended on May 18, 1934, to include within its sweep those who kidnap "for ransom or reward or otherwise".

This is the first reference to the U. S. Code inspired by the Lindbergh kidnapping, 18 USC 1201 and will assist in later research.

CHRONOLOGY

A guide to the chronology of events is a strategic research tool and some outstanding examples are available.

- Fisher, J. (1999). The ghosts of Hopewell. (pp. xix-xxv). Carbondale, IL: Southern Illinois UP.

A linear chronology from March 1, 1932, when the kidnapping was first announced, to May 2, 1936 when Hauptmann's posthumous article, "Why did you kill me?" appeared in Liberty magazine.

- Kennedy, L. H. C. (1985). The airman and the carpenter. (pp. 422-424). New York: Viking Press.

Simultaneous time line of Lindbergh and Hauptmann from 1899, the birth year of both men through and including April 3, 1936, the date of Hauptmann's execution.

- Linder, D. (2000). The Hauptmann case: A chronology.

<http://www.law.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/Hauptmann/chrono.html> (19 Nov. 2000).

The Law School at the University of Missouri – Kansas City offers an online chronology from November 1924, the date of Hauptmann's entry in the US, to 1981, the date of Anna Hauptmann's appeal to the NJ courts for the release of secret evidence.

MEDIA COVERAGE

The public was insatiable in its demand for news and the media obliged in an overwhelming manner. Articles in newspapers and periodicals were plentiful. During the trial, top radio commentators Lowell Thomas, Walter Winchel, and Gabriel Heatter, along with a swarm of journalists, overwhelmed the Union Hotel for living quarters to cover the events. Particular attention should be given to the Hunterdon County Democrat, the hometown newspaper, and the New York Times, the most recognized and respected national paper at that time.

- The Lindbergh case: the trial of the century. (1999). <http://www.lindberghtrial.com>.

The Hunterdon County Democrat, then and now the county's weekly newspaper, covered the trial in its entirety and is an invaluable source of local coverage. An extensive archive is available which includes original photographs, newspaper clippings, and memorabilia.

Photographically reissued newspapers for the issues covering the initial kidnapping news and all weeks of the trial and conviction are also accessible at <http://www.lindberghtrial.com/html/details.htm#Feb21,1935>.

- The New York Times index. (1932). New York: New York Times.

230 articles cited from 1/6/32 – 12/30/32. This extensive scope of information attests to the media enthusiasm. As further research can be found in subsequent annual indexes, it is not necessary to pursue those at this point.

- Lindbergh Case. Keesing's contemporary archives 1931-1934. (Vol 1). (1935). (p83).

London: Keesing's Publications, Ltd.

This chronicle of world current events, published weekly, includes references to 4 articles pertaining to the kidnapping and murder.

- Lindbergh's Baby. Keesing's contemporary archives 1935-1937. (Vol 2). (1938). (p 58). London: Keesing's Publications, Ltd.

7 articles, pertaining to Hauptmann's arrest and trial, are cited for this time period .

GOVERNMENT RESOURCES – FEDERALLAWS

Initial research into Federal Public Laws begins with examining the Cumulative Subject index to the Monthly Catalog of US Government Publications for the period of time under investigation. Searching under “Lindbergh” offers no information; however, using “Kidnapping” as a subject does.

- Buchanan, W. W., and Kanely, E. A. (1974). Cumulative subject index to the monthly catalog of United States government publications 1900-1971. (Vol. 8). (p. 347).

Checking the Catalog of the Public Documents of the 72nd Congress adds a small bit of data that would become a mainstay of this case. Searching under “Kidnapping” just reiterates the previous information ascertained. However, checking “Lindbergh” contributes the details of the broadside that would be widely distributed and reproduced in a large majority of widely distributed reward broadside.

The Congressional Record is exactly that: a record of all proceedings and debates held within each session of the US Congress. As such, it is an important instrument for accessing and verifying the events of any given congress. Beginning with the index volume of the Congressional Record of the 72nd Congress:

- Congressional record index to proceedings and debates of the first session of the seventy-second Congress of the United States of America. (Vol 75 – Part 15). (1932). (Index - p 346). Washington, DC: US Government Printing Office. Subject Word “Kidnaping”.

Item 8:

- Ibid. (Vol. 75 – Part 12). (pp. 13282-13304).

June 17, 1932. Antikidnaping. Mr. O'Connor calls up House Resolution 250, which is sent to the desk and read. The text of this debate includes recognition of the Lindbergh kidnapping and subsequent murder of Charles A. Lindbergh Jr., correlating House Resolution 5657 to a need for stronger Federal legislation to “meet the heartless advance of those who would kidnap and kill”. An interesting note to this House debate: Representative Black made a most prophetic comment regarding the legislature that the Lindbergh case was generating: “Mr. Chairman, to my mind this whole legislation is a piece of hysterical legislation. It arises out of one crime that is destined to become a classic in this country” (13304).

Item number 1:

H.Res 250 – Providing for the consideration of H. R. 5657.

(Note: H. Res. 250 is a rule to consider H.R. 5657, the “kidnaping bill” which included the death penalty for the crime of kidnaping. Before it could be passed, the Senate passed S.1525, an identical bill except it did not include punishment by death but rather left it to the judge’s discretion to impose as many years of imprisonment as he deemed fit).

1. Mr. Cochran of Missouri: Committee on Rules, 11942.
2. Reported back (H. Rept. 1507), 12114, 12128.
3. Debated, 13282.
4. Amended and agreed to (S. 1525 substituted for H. R. 5657), 13287.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The Library of Congress, the oldest federal cultural institution in America, is the first and foremost repository of the nation's history. The collection numbers over 119 million items, of which more than two-thirds are in media other than books. The online catalog (OCLC) of the Library of Congress offers over 12 million items, also in a wide variety of mediums.

For this research project, The Library of Congress houses some worthwhile resources of a different nature than found elsewhere. While there is a selection of some of the more standard fare of monographs and periodical articles, there are also some very interesting records. These items have not been viewed.

- 24 Photographic prints, ranging from 1932 to 1935, covering the broad spectrum of events, from the archives of the New York World-Telegram staff photos.
- Archival manuscript material from prominent citizens

1. Breckinridge family papers, 1752-1965.

Included in the archives of this prominent family renowned in Kentucky and US politics and government are the papers of Henry Breckinridge (1886-1960). An important part of his collection is documents pertaining to his role as legal counsel in the Lindbergh kidnapping case.

2. Land, E. S. Papers of Emory Scott Land, 1879 – 1972.

Cousin to Charles Lindbergh, Naval officer and government official, Emory Scott Land testified in the Lindbergh Kidnapping case; his testimony at the trial is included in his papers.

3. McLean, E. W. Papers of Evalyn Walsh McLean, 1874 – 1948.

Well-known Washington, DC socialite whose papers include documentation which registers her involvement in the Lindbergh kidnapping case.

4. Thayer, R. H. Papers of Robert Helyer Thayer, 1920 – 1980.

Attorney, diplomat, district attorney for New York County, and U. S. State Department Assistant Secretary for Cultural and Educational Affairs, Mr. Thayer served as assistant counsel to Charles Lindbergh during the Lindbergh Kidnapping case – records of this service are included in his papers. Some items are still classified; therefore, restrictions are imposed in part on this collection.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

A pivotal case for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the FBI provided excellent backup for the New Jersey State Police. While the bulk of their records have been transferred to the NJ State Police Museum, a search of the FBI website offers online articles of interest.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

As the official repository of Federal records, National Archives and Records Administration (NARA), an independent Federal agency, oversees their management in order to maintain the historical value of these records. To enable timely access to such documentation, NARA maintains a database of selected holdings. Known as NARA Archival Information Locator, or NAIL, this on-line information service maintains several resources germane to the Lindbergh Kidnapping. Not reviewed. <http://www.nara.gov/nara/nail.html>

Photographs taken of a display of evidence collected during the Lindbergh Kidnapping case is part of this large collection of photographs.

CONSTITUTION

The Lindbergh Kidnapping's magnitude in the United States is confirmed by its mention in the Constitution of the United States. Article I, the Legislative Department includes a citation to the Lindbergh Law and the US Code number, 18 USC 1201, as an example of Federal criminal statutes "punishing interstate transportation of kidnapped persons."

Unable to do further research as the New Jersey Legislative Guide is unavailable in Alexander Library for the periods between 1920 and 1937 and an alternative reference, the New Jersey Legislative Journal, did not begin publication until 1935.

Although New Jersey Legislative Index volumes for the period of time being researched in this guide are unavailable, checking the first available volume does still offer some interesting information.

April 14, 1937. A191 approved, Ch. 19.

An important provision of the American legislative system is the use of precedent. This is utilized in a past and future methodology; that is, today's case will cite previous cases that supports its premise. Likewise, future cases will draw upon today's case to prove their point. Employing the Shepard's Citations database supplies cases cited by the State vs. Hauptmann and those subsequent cases citing this case.

Inputting Hauptmann as a party name search for New Jersey Cases supplies information from West's Atlantic Reporter (Vol. 180, case 809) and New Jersey Law Reports (Vol. 115, page 412) and a goodly number of cases cited. Further checking the Federal Supplement imparts information for Anna Hauptmann's 1983 suit (Hauptmann vs. Wilentz) to reverse her husband's guilty verdict. These citations are of great value for further research and are offered for those pursuing such. For the purpose of this study, however, it is enough to understand the existence and purpose of this resource.

STATE AGENCIES

1. New Jersey State Archives
225 West State Street, Dept of State Building – Level 2
P. O. Box 307
Trenton, NJ 08625-0307
609-292-6260
<http://www.state.nj.us/state/darm/archives.html>

The Division of Archives and Records Management (DARM), a subdivision of the N. J. Department of State, oversees the management of all New Jersey state, county and local governmental records. The records are stored at the New Jersey State Archives in Trenton. While much of the Lindbergh records are duplicates of the original information at the New Jersey State Police Museum and Learning Center, there are some exclusive items to be accessed at this site. These can be viewed only under the direction and supervision of an in-house archivist. Some items are especially valuable and are noted as such.

Unique items:

- Court of Oyer and Terminer. (1935). Court Report Tapes, Bruno Richard Hauptmann Trial. Flemington, NJ: Hunterdon County Circuit Court.

Actual court stenographer tapes from the trial, which can only be read by a court reporter machine.

- Court of Oyer and Terminer. (1935). Court Stenographic Notebooks, Bruno Richard Hauptmann Trial. Flemington, NJ: Hunterdon County Circuit Court.

Gregg Script stenographic notebooks taken during the trial as a backup for the court stenographic machine.

- Department of Institutions and Agencies. (1935). Inmate File #17400 – Bruno Richard Hauptmann. Trenton, NJ: New Jersey State Prison.

Special permission is needed to view due to fragile condition, historical significance, and one-of-a-kind stature.

- Hunterdon County Democrat from 1888-1982. [Microfilm].

Inclusive newspaper coverage of all Lindbergh years.

- Koehler, A. Photograph Album on the Lindbergh Kidnapping Case and Hauptmann Trial. (Vols. 1-2).(1936).

Prepared by Arthur Koehler, the wood specialist whose testimony regarding the ladder used to abduct the baby, this ephemeral record is quite unique. Special permission is needed to view due to fragile condition, historical significance, and one-of-a-kind stature.

Volume 1 documents Koehler's extensive display of his analysis of the ladder and all aspects pertaining to his testimony thereof. Volume 2 documents handwriting analysis and testimony of document experts Albert S. Osborn, considered one of the foremost authorities in the field at that time.

- New Jersey State Archives. (1935). Hauptmann Trial Transcript. (3 reels). Trenton, NJ: Microfilm Publications.

Complete trial transcript of the State of NJ v Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

- New Jersey State Police. Card Index to Lindbergh Case Files. Trenton, NJ: Department of Law and Public Safety.

Duplicate:

- Court of Oyer and Terminer. (1935). Trial transcripts, the State of New Jersey vs. Bruno Richard Hauptmann, on indictment for murder. (Vols. 1-55). Flemington, NJ: Hunterdon County Circuit Court.

Includes original typescript and photocopied transcripts of the trial proceedings.

- New Jersey State Police. (1935). Copies of evidence photographs, trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for kidnapping of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr. Trenton, NJ: Department of Law and Public Safety. [Still Photographic Display].

24 8" x 10" black and white photographs of trial evidence.

- Attorney General's Office. (1982). Records of Eugene A. Sullivan, Assistant Attorney General. Trenton, NJ: Department of Law and Public Safety.

Included are files of Anna Hauptmann v David T. Wilentz, et al, from Mrs. Hauptmann's 1981 appeal on the behalf of her husband. Transcripts from the 32 days of the trial, copies of briefs and motions, correspondence, and research materials are all found in these files.

A bibliography of resources specific to Charles Lindbergh, Bruno Hauptmann, and the kidnapping.

- The Lindbergh kidnapping case: a selection of magazine articles. Trenton, NJ: New Jersey State Library.

Compiled by the Archives and History department of the library, this collection of 11 periodical articles represents less well known pieces covering the topic and not as readily available as the more popularized articles.

3. New Jersey State Police Museum
P. O. Box 7068, River Road
West Trenton, NJ 08628
609-882-2000 ext. 6400

The New Jersey State Police Museum houses the largest collection of Lindbergh memorabilia available and maintains an extensive research library on the Lindbergh case. This is a veritable treasure trove of research material. Mark Falzini, the museum archivist is extremely knowledgeable and very helpful. Due to the 1981 release of all Lindbergh files, much of the original physical evidence is housed here, along with a plethora of relevant material.

- Falzini, Mark. (2000). The Lindbergh kidnapping case: A bibliography. Trenton, NJ: New Jersey State Police Museum and Learning Center.

Compiled by the museum's archivist, this bibliography includes a comprehensive listing of materials produced and published on and about the subject.

- New Jersey Division of State Police. (1932). $25,000 Reward!: for information resulting in the apprehension and conviction of the kidnapers of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr. [Broadside]. Washington, DC: US Government Printing Office.

Just the very fact that the US GPO produced this widely distributed 69 x 43 cm broadside attests to the extraordinary popularity on a national level of Charles Lindbergh. Reproduced in many publications covering the kidnapping and subsequent trial, an original is available for view at the New Jersey State Police Museum display. Ephemeral in nature while an iconic image of the era, it is no longer available from the GPO.

- New Jersey State Police Museum and Learning Center Teacher's Guide. (pp. 22-32).
Trenton, NJ: New Jersey Department of Law and Public Safety.

This recent publication, intended to enhance the experience of first-time visitors to the museum, includes a section on the Lindbergh Kidnapping. Succinct in its presentation, it nevertheless serves as an excellent prelude to a museum visit.

While too numerous to enumerate individually, a condensed listing of some of the resources must be included herewith.

1. New Jersey State Police Department Headquarters Station record book. (1932, Feb. – Jun).

The daily log book for all station activity of the period.

2. Original New Jersey State Police Investigation Reports
3. Seery, W. F., Seykora, J. E., Sisk, T. H., & Manning, J. HJ. (Special Agents). Summary report in re unknown subjects: kidnaping and murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr. (1934, Feb. 16). New York: Federal Bureau of Investigation. New York File #62-3057.

As summarized in the introduction, this report is “a compilation of all material presently contained in the files of the New York office” of the FBI.

4. Records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Investigative case files – the Lindbergh kidnaping case, 1932-1982.

44 boxes of materials represent the case files of the FBI's investigation. While the majority of information covers the period of 1932 to 1938, material continued to be added until 1982.

5. House of Commons Parliamentary debates official reports. (1932, Jun 20).

Investigations regarding British subjects involved in the Lindbergh household at the time of the kidnaping.

6. Metropolitan Police. Correspondence, statements and background checks. (1932).

Includes reports from the Metropolitan Police (Scotland Yard, United Kingdom) into the backgrounds of Lindbergh servants Violet Sharp and Betty Gow.

7. Sachs Standesamt Leipzig (Bureau of Vital Statistics). Documents and translations. German Reich State of Saxony Consulate of USA @ Leipzig

Information regarding Hauptmann's arrest in Leipzig, Germany.

8. Das Stadtarchiv Kamenz (city files of Kamenz).

Correspondence and articles from the Mayor's office, Kamenz, Germany (Das Korrespondenzarchiv des Burgermeisters) – Hauptmann's place of birth.

The inventory also includes the files of many principals involved, such as Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf (NJ State Police Director); David Wilentz (Attorney General); Harold Hoffman (NJ Governor); Violet Sharp (Lindbergh servant). Statements taken by the State Police, videotapes, cassette tapes, microfilm, photographs, negatives, microscope slides of evidence, and more are stored in these files.

Following his conviction, Hauptmann unsuccessfully appealed the guilty verdict to the Court of Errors and Appeals of the State of New Jersey. The report of this appeal is available at several different locations. Three of these are cited below.

- Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. The State of New Jersey, defendant in error, Vs. Bruno Richard Hauptmann, plaintiff in error. 180A809. (1935).

Sullivan, J. F. Byrne to release Lindbergh files, 49 years after the kidnapping. (1981, Oct. 7). The New York Times. <http://www.nytimes.com/books> (7 Dec. 2000).

This news release details the background behind the pending release by Governor Byrne after another appeal by Hauptmann's widow, Anna Hauptmann.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey: Hauptmann, plaintiff, v. David T. Wilentz, et al., defendants: plaintiff's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, submitted prior to ruling on motion to discuss. (1982).

Anna Hauptmann's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law regarding the 1935 trial.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey: Hauptmann, plaintiff, v. David T. Wilentz, et al., defendants brief in support of motion to dismiss amended complaint against state defendants. (Vol. 1-3.) (1982).

The brief of Civil action #81-3177 wherein the State requests a motion to dismiss an amended complaint against state defendants.

Both of these briefs are available at the New Jersey State Library. This attempt of Bruno Hauptmann's widow to reverse the guilty verdict was unsuccessful. As her husband did before her, Anna Hauptmann would die defending his honor and protesting his innocence.

METHODOLOGY

My mother spent her childhood and young adulthood in Flemington and managed to attend the Lindbergh trial daily. As a long time resident of Hunterdon county myself, the Lindbergh Kidnapping Case has held a prolonged fascination for me. It seemed logical to begin in a manner to educate the reader from a beginner's view, making the first resource the home site for Hunterdon County. Following with a basic search engine, I explored as much general information as possible which seemed appropriate, overlooking the more lurid and less-reliable sources, such as <http://www.crimelibrary.com> and <http://www.celebritymorgue.com>. Also, some of the government agencies, such as the NJ State Library and the New Jersey State Archives, came to my attention via web searching.

Next came researching government sources, such as GPO Access, via the Internet. While there are certainly resources available via the web, it soon became clear that hands-on investigation was necessary. The Government Documents section of Alexander Library at Rutgers University was an invaluable repository for Legislative and Executive action, both at the Federal and State level. This searching was purely linear in nature from the beginning date of the tragedy in correlation with the manner of information flow of government action. Given the time frame of the major events, however, there was a bit of frustration at this point since some of the tools are missing or no longer available. These gaps have been presented in the text. The Special Collections Department of Alexander Library yielded quite a bit of information. While much of this is in the form of non-governmental monographs not cited herewith, these were helpful in establishing the range of theories which surround the case.

Interspersed with these library searches were visits to the various departments cited herewith. Materials available at the New Jersey State Library, New Jersey State Archives, Hunterdon Historical Society, and Hunterdon Records Management Office were all viewed firsthand. While many of the State Police Museum exhibits were reviewed, the multitude made it impractical to see them all. Materials at the Library of Congress and National Archives and Records Administration were not reviewed.

Altogether, a wide range of materials and tools were accessed. Given the limited scope of this project, there are many more resources and avenues that were not pursued. The Lindbergh Kidnapping Case, a fascinating topic that is still enshrouded in mystery and controversy, invites this researcher to a more extensive and in-depth search. Given the breadth of published information in all manner of media, it is apparently a notion shared by many.

PROBLEMS ENCOUNTERED

- Autographics – This government website has no information on the Lindbergh kidnapping; only on Lindbergh’s flight history and on San Diego airport
- Congressional Record – Index available but not the Daily Digest
- Congressional Weekly – Not available for the time period.
Availability: 1948-1961 microprint; 1951 – print
- Executive Orders – found difficult to track.
 - NJ Governor’s Executive Order Citator. Thought this would list and describe executive orders. However, only a record of subsequent changes (ie: repealed, reversed, etc.) 1981 – 110 no comments so unchanged but no other information.
 - <http://www.state.nj.us/infobank/circular/eoindex.htm> – Only executive order information is from Governor Whitman’s administrative and some from recent administrations. Only one from Governor Byrne listed; however, it is not #110!
- Facts on File – Rutgers University Library system begins at 1940. Substituted Keesing’s Contemporary Archives in its stead.
- Fedworld - <http://www.fedworld.gov> – no information available.
- GPO Access – <http://www.access.gpo.gov> – no information available.
- Guide to Popular Names – no information available.
- Guide to Smithsonian Archives – 1996 – Washington DC: Smithsonian Institute.
- The Legal Information Institute at Cornell University Law School – <http://www.law.cornell.edu>
- New Jersey Bills – <http://www.njleg.state.nj.us> – no help; only recent information

- National Crime Justice Reference Service – <http://www.ncjrs.org> – Federally sponsored information criminal justice clearinghouse. No information available.
- Thomas – <http://thomas.loc.gov> – no information available.

Lindbergh Law or Lindbergh Act – not found searching in GPO or Thomas

Nothing referenced under the name

- USSCAN - does not begin until 1941
- “Federal Kidnapping Law” – did not realize this was the actual name of the bill until late in research. This may have been a help in searching.
- The public papers and addresses of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Very surprised that FDR makes no mention of the Lindbergh case or its impact on the laws and American society.
